

WOMAN'S NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CLUB

From The Right To Vote...The Power To Lead

Newsletter July/August 2017

President's Letter

Another year ends for the WNDC. And what a year it's been. As we inch closer to our landmark centenary year, 2022, it becomes more and more apparent that we need to start our new century closer to our original raison d'être—to level the playing field for women in policy and politics. From the Right to Vote, the Power to Lead remains as potent a message as ever.

And how do we achieve that goal? By electing women to state-houses and Governors' mansions; to the House of Representatives and the Senate; and then the ultimate prize: the White House. We came close in 2016. We will attain success in 2020. But, for that to happen we need women to run in races happening now. In 2017, 2018, and 2020. We need a muscular, empowered DNC. We need a new leader to emerge who will capture the imagination of the nation. And we need a clear message from Progressives and Democrats, We need 24 seats to take back the House. On average, the President's party loses 33 seats in the midterms. We can do this!

POLITICS

In the nation as a whole, women make up a majority of registered voters and have voted since 1980 at higher rates in presidential elections than men. And since the election upset in November 2016, a new era of women's activism has emerged. We, at the WNDC, are witnessing it first-hand, Our membership numbers have almost doubled in one year and a lot of these new additions are young, motivated people who want to actively engage in turning the political tide. We are close to (continued on page 4...)

PROF. LAUREN STRAUSS—

“Her Hat Was in the Ring: Bella Abzug and Her Life in the Political Trenches”

TIME: 11:30 AM—2:00 PM

Pioneering lawyer, Congresswoman, advocate for Soviet Jewry, gay rights, civil and women’s rights and opponent of nuclear escalation, Bella Savitsky Abzug is still remembered today for her outsized personality and her activist career that stretched from the late 1940s to her death in the 1990s. But she is much more than a sum of her famous causes; as a strongly identified Jewish woman who worked alongside radicals and yet served as a member of Congress, Abzug balanced her outsider status with her passion for the American political tradition.

Dr. Lauren B. Strauss is a Scholar in Residence at American University, where she teaches courses on modern Jewish history and literature. She has also taught at GWU and the University of Maryland. From 2012 to 2017, Dr. Strauss was Executive Director of the Foundation for Jewish Studies.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM LEOGRANDE — “IMPLICATIONS OF TRUMP CUBA POLICY”

TIME: 11:30 AM—2:00 PM

On June 16, President Trump announced his new Cuba policy, which promises to reverse much of the progress made under President Obama's policy of engagement. Given by AU Professor LeoGrande, one of the country's most renowned experts on US—Cuba diplomacy, this lecture will provide insights on the potential impact of this new policy on diplomatic and economic relations, and on the citizens of both countries.

William M. LeoGrande is Associate Vice-Provost for Academic Affairs, Professor of Government, and Dean Emeritus of the School of Public Affairs at American University in Washington, DC. He has worked with the Democratic Policy Committee of the United States Senate, the Democratic Caucus Task Force on Central America of the United States House of Representatives. He is the author of Our Own Backyard: The United States in Central America, 1977-1992, and most recently, he is the co-author of Back Channel to Cuba: The Hidden History of Negotiations between Washington and Havana. He has written for Foreign Policy, Foreign Affairs, the New York Times, Washington Post, Miami Herald, and other journals, magazines, and newspapers.

the 650 mark for total members this year.

On Inauguration Weekend, an estimated 3.2 million people in hundreds of cities across the country took to the streets to protest the incoming president. But the real power of the protests and marches that erupted post-2016 election will be measured not in crowd size, but in the lasting impact it has on the political process. And one of the clearest results of the march—and of the election as a whole—is the wave of political participation among women at local, state, and national levels that's emerging in its wake.

According to EMILY's LIST president Stephanie Schriock, the organization holds trainings for women candidates often, but the “incredible energy” around it now is unique. “We spend a lot of time recruiting,” she said. “[Now] we're seeing women calling us.” Since Election Day, EMILY's LIST has had more than 4,000 people reach out to say they're interested in running—1,660 since Inauguration Day

Like-minded organizations have reported similar spikes in interest, VoteRunLead reported that in the past 2 months, more than 2,300 women have signed up to take its online course, and the organization's January 7 seminar registered 1,200 women in less than 48 hours. And according to a She Should Run spokesperson, in a normal month the organization sees “at best, and with significant effort, anywhere between a few dozen and a few hundred women” sign up. But in the 3 months after the election, co-founder and CEO Erin Loos Cutraro said 8,100 women indicated their interest in running for office by registering for their online incubator program, which teaches them how. What's more, Cutraro said, things show no sign of slowing. “We had a staff meeting, and we were going over numbers,” Cutraro said. “Our community manager said, ‘But hold on—we got 100 more last night.’”

In the primary elections on June 13, 2017 in Virginia, 61 women sought a seat in the State Legislature—about 30% of the field. The overall crop of 206 candidates is far bigger than usual, and the number of women may be a record. The 50 women running as Democrats are the most for that party in at least a decade and probably ever—up from 27 who filed in 2015. Republicans are fielding 10 female candidates, and one woman is running as an independent.

Focusing on this exciting phenomenon our Get-Out-The-Vote Committee, composed primarily of young member activists are organizing hundreds of outside activist groups to make the WNDC the resistance and activism hub, We are working with the new DNC leadership to get a seat at the table and once again to make the WNDC their DuPont Circle headquarters,

PROGRAMS & EVENTS

In addition to the numerous regular programs organized by our very active and dedicated Program Committee, the club hosted regular money/publicity-generating events as follows:

- Two Presidential Debates with 152 and 130 attendees; one V.P. Debate with 52 attendees.
- Election Night party brought in close to 400 attendees with large foreign groups.
- Our Awards Night honoring Gabby Giffords as the “Woman of the Year Award” and Ilyse Hogue as the newly-created “Trailblazer Award” brought in close to a 100 attendees and over $25,000 in revenue.
- DNC-related activities brought hundreds of people into the clubhouse for women-to-women phone banking, alumni phone-banking, and training sessions, The result was an exponential increase in visibility and membership.
- Women's March on Washington (WMW), 4-day events (January 18 to 21) that included training/political campaigning/speakers/performers/musicians, and more, raised $84,000 in revenue and packed sold-out events.
- DNC-Candidate-Forum (February 15): all 10 candidates participated. Big press event.
- Participation in the DNC Election in Atlanta (February 25) was another highlight. I spoke at the Women's Caucus about WNDC activities.
- Met with the head of the Carter Foundation in Atlanta about collaboration on women's issues.
- DNC Leadership Welcome Reception (March 15) honoring Tom Perez, Revenue generated was around $30,000.
- Organizing meeting (April 6) with Democracy for America (DFA) chief Jim Dean and Liz Jaff of the DNC brought in hundreds of young activists.
- Tax March breakfast (April 15) was attended by MoveOn chief, Ben Wikler and Revolution Messaging

representative, Sam Goodstein

- JFK birthday centennial celebration at WNDP (May 8) brought in about 200 attendees.
- Mayor Bowser appreciation event (May 25)—over 100 attendees.
- Tribute to Councilman Jack Evans (June 22)—96 attendees.
- Meeting with DNC CEO, Jess O'Connell, and grassroots political organizations (June 28)—expected attendance 200.

There are many more exciting events on the horizon for the remainder of the year. Stay tuned.

FINANCES

The 2016 fiscal year started with challenges requiring some nimble planning. We had close to a $200,000 deficit (accounts payable), low cash reserves, and a slow season in event rentals due to a national pre-occupation with election-related activities. We turned some of these challenges to our advantage, diving deep into political participation, making the WNDP into the Clinton campaign hub and the headquarters of the DNC and hosting debate-watch parties, election-related events, and a vigorous GOTV program. The result was an influx of new members and fresh revenue. The defeat of the Democrats catapulted us into the forefront of the resistance as we became the DC hub of the WMW and organized 4 days of wall-to-wall programming leading up to the March. We organized events that brought in luminaries such as Nancy Pelosi, the Reverend Jesse Jackson, Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, Chris Matthews, the WMW founders, noted performers, activists, and many more. The press came in droves. We acquired a luminescence and public recognition resulting in an almost doubling of our membership. The final result is a complete wiping out of our debt, over $100,000 spent on capital improvements and a dramatic increase in our net income. This turn of events has allowed us to set a $2 million budget for year 2017–2018, a hitherto unrealized dream. The renting out of the space on the third floor to member Michael Beidler played a critical role in our financial turnaround as well.

FUTURE OUTLOOK

The future outlook for the club is positive. We expect the coming year to bring huge dividends, as long as we remain committed to advancing the cause of Progressives and Democrats in a highly charged political climate. We will attempt to move center-stage within the party apparatus and continue to raise our image in policy and political circles. Our goal to continue high-visibility events on a regular basis should bring in new energy, members, and resources. We have so much to look forward to—the mid-term elections in 2018, the presidential elections in 2020, and the centennial celebrations of Suffrage the same year. And last but not least we will celebrate our own 100th anniversary in 2022. The next 5 years show a clear roadmap of success—the only thing that would stop us would be a lack of will and imagination. Both are abundant! So here's to another successful year for the Woman's National Democratic Club!

Trump's Economic Argument for Paris Accord Wrong! Biggest Fallout! US Global Leadership Lost!

Brookings Institution, June 6, 2017

Summary by Gretchen Bloom, Roving Reporter, WNDC—Inputs from Dr. Tom Gross, WNDC

Overview

With President Trump announcing that the US will withdraw from the Paris Accord on Climate Change, the playing field is now uncertain. The US had served as a leader in crafting the Accord, and encouraged developed and developing countries to join the Accord. A panel at Brookings discussed what the US withdrawal means for the global climate change agenda and for the US leadership position in the world.

Background

The Paris Accord is widely accepted in the world, as a framework for climate change actions, with 195 countries signing on to it. It is part of the progression from the original UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) (1992), although efforts prior to the Paris Accord to achieve collaboration through the Kyoto Protocol (2005) and the Copenhagen Agreement (2009) were less successful.

Why is the Paris Accord special?

- Because it achieved universal acceptance, with ALL countries signing on to it, both rich and less rich (except Syria, Nicaragua, and the USA).
- As a non-binding framework, it is flexible and acceptable. Countries set their own targets which are reviewed and ramped up every 5 years.
- It affirms that climate change is already happening.
- It commits funds for poorer countries which, despite contributing little to the CO₂ problem, are now willing to participate in the solution.
- It has an ambitious outcome, committing to a temperature increase of no more than 2.0°F and aspiring to no more than 1.5°F above pre-industrial levels.

- The most polluting countries (US, China, India), known as “sinners”, agreed to become “saints” and take leadership roles. (The US is now out.)

When President Trump made his “nationalist” statement that the US would pull out of the ‘globalist’ Accord, the other six members of the G7 publicly stated that they remain committed to the Accord. Even most members of the G20 remain firm in their commitments, some of which are taking strong initiatives. The OECD, for example, has launched a program called “Investing in Climate, Investing in Growth,” opposed to the Trump approach. Germany, the Energy Chair, has created a “High Level Commission on Carbon Prices.”

Under the Obama Administration, the US had set a target of reducing carbon emissions in the USA by 26 to 28% below the 2005 level by 2025. Obama also had created a “Clean Power Plan” under the Clean Air Act. These initiatives have both been annulled by Trump.

So What??

The impact of the USA pulling out of the Accord is less critical from an environmental perspective than from a diplomatic one. Trump shifted the US role from one as a leader to one of “sticking a finger in the eye of environmental allies.” Despite Trump’s withdrawal, American companies, communities and political units will continue to engage in innovative climate change initiatives because they make profitable economic sense. More than 100 businesses, nearly three dozen mayors, more than 80 university presidents and three Democratic governors are now forming an effort to work with the UN on climate change, under former Mayor Bloomberg’s lead.

The other big “sinners,” China and India, have each shown their willingness to change their approach to the environment, and benefit at the same time. China has taken a big lead on developing solar power, moving into the space now ceded by the US. India has just decided not to build more coal-fueled power plants, for economic and health reasons.

Although neither is as big a polluter as the US, with China at one-third, and India at one-tenth, both are investing in renewable energy far faster and to a greater extent than the US, which may lead the US to miss out on the opportunities available in the future renewable energy economy.

Conclusion

DNC Update

DNC Update

Chair Tom Perez is changing the culture of the DNC inside and out:

1. Changing the Mission Statement from electing just the President to electing Democrats up and down the ticket from school board to state legislatures and above. Eliminating the term “off-year” from the lexicon.
2. Reorganizing the DNC staffing by imploding its stove-pipe structure and converting to a pod structure.
3. Redefining the roles of DNC members including its Executive Committee member roles—no more hierarchies.
4. Nurturing our most loyal constituencies.
5. Reaching out to individuals and constituencies that Democrats have not traditionally touched.

The DNC is a key part of the momentum building around the country:

1. The two Democratic contenders for Governor in the Virginia Primary on June 13 earned nearly 50% more votes than all three Republicans on the ballot.
2. The DNC sponsored 10 additional staffers to work in Georgia on the District-6 special election for Jon Ossoff on June 20— not done below the Presidential level in recent memory.
3. Deputy DNC Chair, Congressman Keith Ellison, leads the “Resistance Summer” effort. As of June 17, 41 of 57 state parties have submitted plans for grants to help carry out their resistance programs. Go to resistsummer.org.
4. One million people tuned in to watch the most recent “Democrats Live,” a weekly live streaming of events and programs featuring Democratic Party activists, established in March by Chair Perez and Deputy Chair Ellison. Follow Democrats Live on Facebook, or at live.democrats.org.

Democrats are winning and will continue to win if we keep our focus on the issues that matter to working families: access to affordable health care, quality education, an economy that works for everyone (not just those at the top) believing that a ban on Muslims is not a national security plan—nor is deporting undocumented immigrant parents, transparent legislative processes. See DNC Deputy Chair Ellison’s op-ed on the minimum wage here.

See the faces of Trump’s mass deportations here.

On a most somber note, it must be noted that the DNC officially and all Democrats unofficially condemn the shooting of public officials as occurred in Alexandria, VA the week of June 12. This unconscionable act was an attack on our entire country, our democracy, and all those who answer the call to public service. Our hearts are with the victims and their families and our deep gratitude is extended to the Capitol Police and first responders for exemplary service.
